WILSON'S REPLY WITHIN A WEEK

By Telegram to The Freeman.
Washington, July 12.—The eyes of officials and diplomats in Washington today centered on the summer white house where President Wilson begins consideration of his reply to the second unsatisfactory German answer to the protest of this government on the sinking of the Lusitania.

Indications today are that the third note of this government will be dispatched probably within a week and it will be brief, pointedly reiterating the former views of this government and rejecting the counter proposals of Germany.

Secretary Lansing is scheduled to go to Cornish, N. H., by the middle of the week. Before his departure it is likely he will have a lengthy conference with Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, who is anxious to be of assistance, if possible, in straightening out the present badly tangled situation.

It is accepted almost as a matter of course here that President Wilson cannot accede in any degree to the suggestions made in the German reply. The administration is understood to appreciate the cordial tenor of the German reply, but as to the principles involved the two nations are still far apart. The way has been left open for further correspondence, but Germany and the United States apparently are as far apart as they were six weeks ago.

The impression here is that the president's third communication regarding the protection of American travelers at sea will be a document remarkable for its brevity and directness. It is not thought that this government will enter into a lengthy argument, although the president is expected to point out why the counter proposals of Germany cannot be accepted by the United States.

The suggestion, for instance, that the United States shall notify the German government of the departure of ships which carry no contraband, probably will be held to be illogical. This arrangement, it is contended, would amount to a notification that all other ships do carry contraband and are legitimate prey for submarines.

The proposal that the United States shall put additional ships under the American flag is another German plan which this government is expected to reject because it would carry with it a virtual abandonment of the claim that Americans have a right to travel on any merchantman without fear of losing their lives.

President Wilson, it is anticipated, will "stand pat" on his prior contention that American citizens, on peaceful missions, must have protection on the high seas and that the right of submarine attack upon unarmed vessels extends only to visit and search and not destruction. The president is further expected to inform the Berlin government that the United States cannot accept any proposal whereby belligerents are permitted to dictate the terms under which neutral passengers shall use the seas.

At present there is an apparent deadlock of opinion between the two governments. One encouraging feature of the situation is the fact that although Germany insists upon paper that her submarine warfare must not be interrupted, she evidently has avoided attacking vessels with American flags since the Lusitania incident. This indicates that Germany does not seek a rupture with this country and that a compromise may yet be reached.

There was loss of life on the Armenian, it is true, but the props were knocked from under any American plan by the development that the Armenian sought to escape and resisted search while carrying contraband.

ELKS THROG CALIFORNIA CITY

By Telegram to The Freeman.
Los Angeles, Cal., July 12.—With nearly 10,000 visiting Elks and their families in Los Angeles and special trains rolling in every few hours, bringing still more visitors, final preparations were under way today for the formal opening of the Grand Lodge sessions tonight. The first business session of the convention will be held tomorrow.

Pasadena and Glendale lodges today took charge of the visitors and arranged their entertainment. One hundred performers took part in an outdoor cabaret on the grounds of the Hotel Green at Pasadena this morning, and a moving picture company staged a burlesque bull fight in the stadium here this afternoon.

A special train arrived from San Diego early today bringing the New England delegation. The company of Elks and their families had stopped off in San Diego to visit the exposition there.

A lively contest was in prospect over the privilege of entertaining the next meeting. Atlanta and Baltimore being the noted contestants, the odds favoring the southern city.

CARRANZA NOW SEEKS RECOGNITION

By Telegram to The Freeman.
Washington, July 12.—General Carranza's re-taking of Mexico City is the first step in his new campaign for recognition by the United States as the head of the government of Mexico, it was conceded in state department and Mexican factional circles today. State department officials intimated that the first chief of the Constitutionalists would get little comfort from the United States government at this time, even though he maintained civil authority in the Mexican capital. They pointed out that eleven months ago Carranza was escorted through the streets of Mexico City to the palace amid showers of roses and the buzz of thousands of victorious revolutionary soldiers, yet he was unable to secure recognition for his faction from the government of the United States. Since that time he has twice evacuated the capital and re-taken it, but today he is as far from being master of the country as he was a year ago.

At the Mexican embassy, however, the Carranza representatives today showed a high degree of optimism as to their campaign for recognition by the United States and they predicted that their government soon would make a formal request that the United States offer diplomatic relations with the Villa agency today reiterated its claim that the Constitutionalists army which attacked General Villa near Aguascalientes has been cut off from food and water and was being driven into an impossible situation with the Villa forces at its front and rear.

IN RECORDER'S COURT.
Wide Variety of Cases Brought Up for Disposal.

The defendant pleaded not guilty and the case was adjourned until Thursday morning.

Anthony Bowers and August Albright were arrested on Saturday night for fighting on Abel Street. The men are brothers-in-law and the row started over the fact that Bowers accused Albright of licking his wife. Mamie Dazzie was arrested on the Strand on Saturday night by Police- man Charles J. Murphy for being drunk and disorderly. She was arrested this morning and given a fine of $3. Mamie was pretty well "lit up" and attracted quite a crowd by her actions.

Abram Shonger, a fresh automobile driver, was arrested Sunday by Policeman Daun for speeding on Broadway. When arraigned before the recorder he again became "sassy" and was fined $5. The fine was paid.

About 4 o'clock Sunday morning a stone was thrown through the window of the Garrison cafe on Wilbur avenue. A colored man attempted to enter the place a few minutes later and was arrested by Policeman Boyd. He gave his name as Arthur Hinson. Fleeing guilty to the act he was sent to jail for ninety days by Recorder Lang.

Fred W. G. Fagompre was arrested on Sunday by Policeman Reardon for exceeding the speed limit. The officer claimed the auto driver was going at the rate of 26 miles an hour. He paid a fine of $3.

GERMANS WIN BY USE OF GAS

By Telegram to The Freeman.
Paris, July 12.—German troops have won a victory at Souchez, but an attack by the Kaiser's forces in the Woivre region has been repulsed at every point by the French, the war office announced this afternoon.

The official communique admits the loss of the Souchez cemetery after a sharp conflict in which the Germans again made use of poisonous gases to open the way to victory. After they had loosed the gas upon the French lines, the Germans made a fierce attack. This was repulsed at first, but the Germans renewed their assault and took the cemetery.

The German defeat in the Woivre region is another set back for the army of Crown Prince Frederick William, which is striving to cut its way through to Verdun both from the Argonne and Woivre.

SAUGERTIES.
Saugerties, July 12.—Huber's baseball team of Saugerties defeated Tommy Galt's nine at Catskill on Saturday by a score of 4 to 0.

AL JENNINGS HELD UP BY BANDITS

By Telegram to The Freeman.
Los Angeles, Cal., July 12.—Several sheriff's posses from Pomona, Cal., today were searching the country road about Ganesha Junction for two bandits who held up a Pacific Electric car a mile west of Pomona late last night, robbed fifty passengers and escaped with several hundred dollars in cash. The latest reports stated that the officers had found no trace of the robbers.

One of the passengers on the car when the bandits ordered "hands up" was Al Jennings, once a famous bandit himself. Jennings now is conducting evangelistic meetings in Southern California. His hands went up with those of the other passengers. Jennings had been preaching at Pomona last night and his evening's collection was tied in a handkerchief. He dropped the coin laden handkerchief on the floor when the bandits entered, and all they got from him was a single $1 bill.

DROPPED ROCK ON RIFTON STAGE

While William Deyo, the Rifton stage driver, was passing under the bridge at Wilbur this morning some boys dropped a large rock from the railroad tracks. The rock passed through the top of the stage and fell between Mr. Deyo and a passenger he was bringing to this city. Had it struck either on the head the chances are that he would have been killed. Mr. Deyo reported the matter to the police but the culprits have not been found.

BRICK MAKERS DISCUSS STRIKE

About fifty brick manufacturers from along the Hudson river met at the Y. M. C. A. building on Saturday to consider ways and means of relieving the situation caused by the strike of the employees on the Haverstraw yards. Over one thousand men are on strike at Haverstraw over conditions which they refuse to accede to and it was thought that with the co-operation of the up-river brick-makers some plan could be evolved to ameliorate conditions. A committee was appointed to investigate the matter. The brick manufacturers present represented nearly every yard on the river with the exception of those at Verplanck's Point and composed mostly of the yards from Haverstraw to Albany. A committee consisting of Philip Goldrick of Goldrick's Landing, Mr. Brophy of New York and Mr. King of Grassy Point was appointed to ascertain why the Verplanck Point manufacturers were not represented. Most of the members present were not members of the Greater New York Brick Company which was investigated some time ago by the authorities and the suspicion arises that a separate organization is about to be formed to fight the older association.

Mohonk Shuts Out Walden.

Mohonk Lake, July 12.—Evidently Mohonk's defeat by Wilbur last Monday put the boys on their mettle, for Saturday afternoon they smothered the Walden Independent Club 8 to 0, playing fast, errorless ball. Both Frazer and Owl were in good good form, the former fanning ter men and the latter thirteen. The feature of the game was the fielding of Churchill, whose splendid running catch of Stevens' line drive in the seventh inning, with two out and three on base, ruined Walden's only chance of scoring.

FORCED TO WEAR SHOES

HERE'S an item that may interest believers in tyrannous Prohibition laws:

KOKOMO, Ind.—John Puckett, the Tipton County farmer who never wore shoes, though he is the owner of 2,000 acres of land, appeared here today wearing a heavy pair of shoes. He used to say that God gave him a pair of soles, and he had no use for others, but when asked today if his God-given soles had worn out, he replied: "No, they're still good; but since Tipton County went dry there are so many broken bottles around that it's dangerous to go barefoot."

Prohibition may compel men to wear shoes, but it will not destroy a man's desire for such food-drinks as Business fights shy of dead towns. A sure sign of a dead one is the lack of local pride. People who live in a live, prosperous town show it. Their stores are attractive, their streets clean, their homes are well painted.

Nothing shows a lack of pride, a lack of prosperity, like paint-hungry buildings. Let's paint up. As the most durable and economical paint, we recommend

A Desperate Remedy

It Was Applied to Two Patients and Was Successful

By F. A. MITCHEL

"John," said my special friend, Mrs. Edith Allison. "I am very sorry to see you neglecting the most important matter in a man's or a woman's life. Some day, when you are an old man, tired of the social life, tired of your club, forced in the evening to go out to seek the companionship of persons whom you care little about, and many of whom care less for you; when you return to your lonely bachelor quarters, with no one to welcome you, to pass a night alone, you will regret having wasted years of opportunity to provide yourself with a home."

"What a horrible picture!"

"The picture is not half as horrible as the reality."

"Marriage is an awful risk."

"A risk, yes; the other is a certainty."

"But I can't compel myself to love any woman nor any woman to love me."

"That is where we in America err on the side of romance. Abroad the principal feature in wedlock is the dowry; here it is what we call love. A dowry is tangible; love is intangible. Far be it from me to decry a pure affection, but that emotional condition, which in men and women is one minute ecstatic and the next may turn to hate, or later to indifference, is no basis on which to make a life contract binding two persons together."

"Would you have me go into a room blindfolded where there are a number of unmarried women, take one of them by the hand and lead her to the altar?"

"You might as well do that as take a partner while blinded by love. You don't need to do either. One thing you can do that is reasonable in choosing a wife. If you take any one into your employ you require references, don't you?"

"Certainly."

"Very well. Why should you not all the more require references in taking a wife?"

"And the wife, I presume, should require references of me?"

"Certainly."

"It seems to me," I replied after some hesitation, "that your idea would only serve to keep me and the woman I might marry still farther apart."

"Not if it is properly carried out."

What was Edith driving at? I confess I could not make out. That she was a woman of great originality I knew. That she was my devoted friend I did not doubt. She had cautioned me before this against waiting till I was an old man before marrying, and I suspected that she now had some plan for me. I wondered if she was not bent on making a match between me and some young woman who, like myself, was growing out of her youth and should be mated.

"Come, Edith," I said; "out with it. You're bent on marrying me off. What is your plan?"

She paused a few moments before replying; then she put down some fancy work she was doing and, looking me straight in the eye, said:

"Desperate cases require desperate remedies."

"Granted."

"It would do no good for me to introduce you to a woman who I believed would make you a good wife."

"I should probably spurn her."

"Nor would it avail to introduce such a woman to you, assuring her that she would be happy with you."

"She would wonder if you thought her bereft of any taste whatever."

"I have a woman in mind and have had just such a conversation with her as I have had with you."

"The dickens you have!"

"Yes, and she admits that any man introduced to her for the purpose of making a match would repel her."

"I see; you are going to throw us together without our knowing of your design."

"Nonsense. That threadbare theme of novelists might do for very young persons. You and the woman I have in mind are too old. The only way by which you can be united is for both to place the matter in the hands of a third party."

"As in Turkey, where the parents arrange matches for their children and the groom never sees the bride's face till he lifts her veil after they are married."

"You have stated the case exactly."

"Very well, to cease generalizing and come down to a definite plan?"

"The lady whom I have assured that you will make her a good husband has consented to leave the whole matter to me. My plan requires that you do the same. Do you consent?"

"How can I consent to what I don't know?"

"You are both being assured by me that neither will make a mistake—to turn the key of wedlock on yourselves without having seen each other."

"Great heavens!"

"Is it not done every day in Turkey?"

"Go on."

"You are to be married without any previous acquaintance, not having seen each other till you stand before the clergyman who marries you. At the conclusion of the ceremony you are to separate for a week, at the end of which time you may, if so disposed, call on your bride. From this time further, if you are both so disposed, you are to do as much or as little courting as you like."

"It seems to me that this is putting the cart before the horse."

"Not at all. It is simply applying a stimulant to obviate the indifference of middle life. If you cut a gash in your arm what do you do to draw the parts together?"

"Apply an adhesive plaster."

"That is the intention of this plan of mine. It is an adhesive plaster to draw you and the woman together. Married you cannot fly apart. You are bound by matrimony."

"Edith," I exclaimed, "what a head you have on your shoulders! You should have been a scientist."

"I am giving you nothing but common sense, nothing but what has been practiced in all parts of the world from time immemorial."

"Do you mean to tell me that you have succeeded in inducing a woman to consent to your plan?"

"She would consent to no other. There must be a plunge, then time to recover from its effects."

I sat thinking over this remarkable proposition for some time without speaking.

"Edith," I said at last, "this is certainly a desperate remedy you propose, but it is as desperate for the woman you have in mind as for me. You would not, I know, concoct such a scheme for me with any one except a lady and one in whom you repose great confidence. I only question whether in recommending me to her you are not influenced to wrong her on account of your friendship for me. The lady has doubtless had time to think the matter over. Give me the same. When I have decided I will advise you."

I went to my room and did the hardest job of thinking I have ever done in my life. I had already come to hate the loneliness of my abode, and my picture as a white-headed old man came up before me—tottering out alone to dinner and tottering back to get rid of the hours remaining before bedtime. These and other pictures of the future I called up, contrasting them with the sweets of home, wife, children. On the other hand, I thought of being tied up with a woman who might turn out to be a virago. I remembered that my friend, Edith Allison, had said that the loneliness of old age is a certainty, matrimonial unhappiness a chance. As for waiting for a love affair, I had been doing that for twenty years, and there was less hope now than ever. True, under the influence of a sudden passion I had wished to marry one of several different women at different times. Fortunately they had all refused me. Later I found that my judgment of them had been execrable. In Mrs. Allison's judgment I had every confidence—that is, her judgment of women.

One morning I was driven to the house of the fiancée I had never seen and who had never seen me, to be married, arriving at a few minutes before noon. I was prepared stoically to meet either a beauty or a Gorgon. At 12 o'clock the bridal party entered the room where I waited. My wife to be was not beautiful, but I saw character in her face. I was relieved.

Her mother led the way and, advancing to me, grasped my hand, pressed it warmly and showed also a warm sympathy in her face. The bride, whose color seemed to have deserted her, did not raise her eyes to look at me. From thinking of the frightful plunge I was taking—so I considered it—I was turned to sympathy for her. We stood together before the clergyman while members of the bride's family gathered on the sides. I made the responses in a firm tone; the bride's were barely audible.

When we had been pronounced man and wife my wife turned and for the first time fixed her eyes on my face. This first look at her husband was met by a sympathetic, assuring smile from me. At the same time I took her hand and pressed it. Then I turned to carry out the terms of this singular plan, by leaving the house.

My wife did not relinquish my hand. Her mother, who was watching us, asked me to step into another room, where a breakfast had been prepared. It occurred to me that if my bride had been disappointed in me I would have been permitted to depart. Doubtless the mother saw in her daughter what decided her to detain me.

We passed into a breakfast room and seated ourselves about a round table. There was a stiffness among us for a time, but presently we were chatting as if we had known one another for years. All talked except the bride, who sat with her eyes fixed on her plate. But roses had come into her cheeks, and there was always on her lips that which resembled an incipient smile.

When we had refreshed ourselves we all rose from the table, and the members of the family vanished in different directions, leaving me and my wife.

alone in the hall, I with my hand on the knob of the front door.

I have narrated this important episode in my life so far as I intend to narrate it here. That part of the plan which related to a post-nuptial courtship I do not intend to touch upon, except to say that our courtship began when my wife first looked up at me after the ceremony, and, though I am now an old man, it is still in progress. Children have blessed our union, and our family circle is what family circles should be; so I consider it about all that makes life worth living.

I was induced recently to dine at a club one evening with a friend. An old bachelor whom I knew came in, took a seat alone at a neighboring table and desolately fed himself. What he did when his dinner was ended I don't know, but a month later he committed suicide.

Great Men and Doubles.

It is said that there is a French soldier who is the living image of Napoleon I. Other instances have been found of persons born many years apart bearing a striking likeness to one another. Mr. Winston Churchill is the "double" of the Emperor Titus, at least according to the bust of the latter at the British museum. "Dion Boucicault," writes George Augustus Sala, "was the very image of Sir Kenelm Digby as he appears in the frontispiece to his 'Choice and Experimental Receipts in Physics and Chirurgery.' Douglas Jerrold was the ikon of Montgolfier, the discoverer of the fire balloon, and the late Montagu Williams, Q. C., if he had donned a flowing black perwig, might well have sat to a Sir Peter Lely of our times for a portrait of Charles II."—London Tatler.

Kinsale.

Kinsale keeps a modest place in the history of Ireland. It was here that Don Juan's fleet landed 3,000 men to join hands with O'Neill, out of which landing grew the story that the cottages at World's End are "still inhabited by the descendants of Spaniards." It was from Kinsale that James II. on March 2, 1689, landed and from Kinsale he sailed after his defeat at the battle of the Boyne. Thirty years ago the house in which he spent the night before his departure was still in existence. Kinsale was greater in the past than now, for we read that "of all the Irish ports it was the best situated for intercourse with France and that in the town Marlborough found a thousand barrels of wheat and eighty pipes of claret."—London Spectator.

Distilleries on Old Farms.

On all the old farms in the United States there was a little distillery, though on some farms it was not so little, just as there was an icehouse and a smokehouse, where the peaches and apples and grapes could be distilled into fruit brandy.

HELEN PREECE

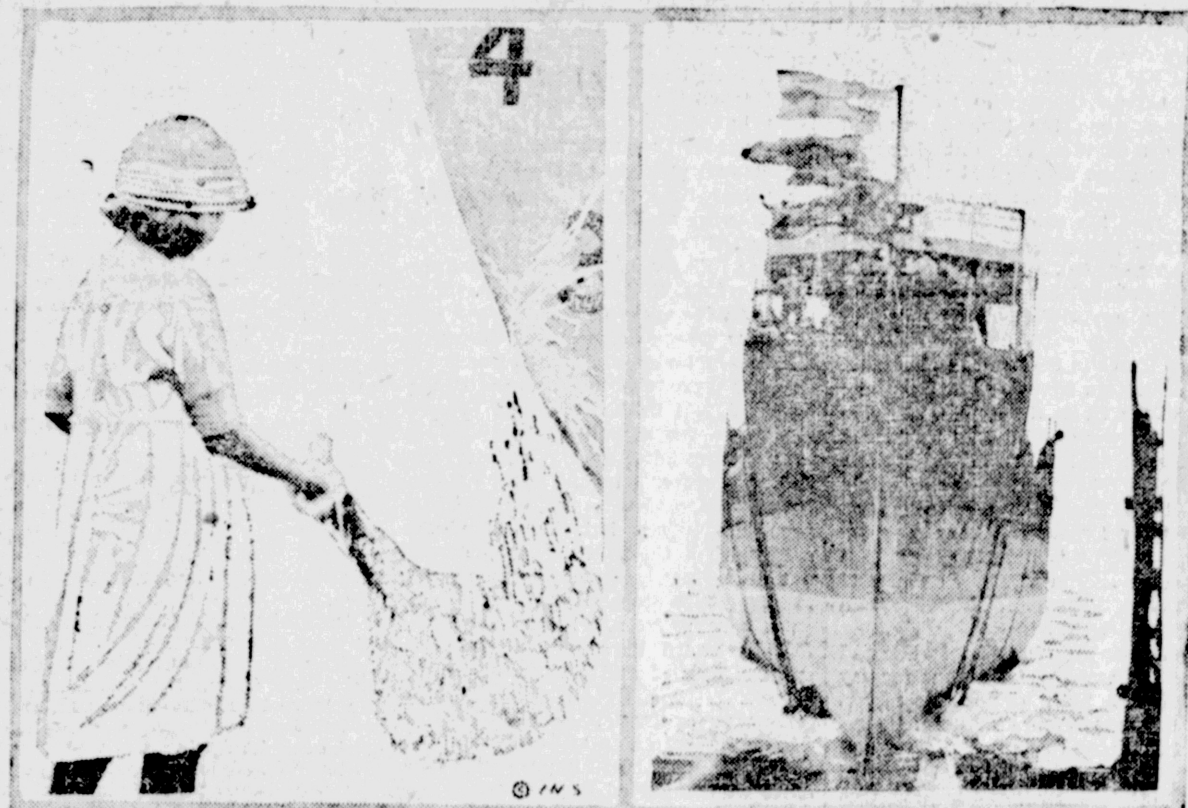

SUES TO HAVE GIRL CEASE USING HER NAME.

Helen Preece.

Fride's Crossing, Mass., July 12.—For the first time in the history of Massachusetts court, suit has been entered to prevent one woman using another's name. Mrs. George H. Chipchase is suing Helen Preece Chipchase, who, as Helen Preece, an English school girl stirred horse lovers of this country by her remarkable riding at horse shows in New York and other large cities. Mrs. Chipchase says that as Mrs. George H. Chipchase, she herself also gained fame as a rider, and that Helen Preece has made capital out of the name since adopting it. Miss Preece and Chipchase were married in New York on March 20, 1915, but the first Mrs. Chipchase says there was no divorce between her and her husband, who were married 10 years ago.

Chipchase is manager of Judge William H. Moore's stables in New York.

Miss Preece was but 14 years old when she came from England in 1912 and rode at the Madison Square Horse Show in New York. She had previously gained the attention of Queen Alexandra by her riding at the Olympia in London. She is also an expert in other athletics.

MISS ANNA CONYNGHAM STEVENS—SPONSOR—LAUNCHING OF DESTROYER CONYNGHAM

NEW U. S. DESTROYER LAUNCHED.

Philadelphia, July 12.—The new U. S. torpedo boat destroyer Conyngham was launched at the Cramp Ship Yards here with Miss Anna Conyngham Stevens, 10 year old descendant of the man for whom the boat was named, as the sponsor. Captain Gustavus Conyngham, achieved fame as a commander of a privateer during the Revolutionary War.

The Conyngham will make a speed of about 29½ knots per hour, which will make it one of the fastest boats in the U. S. Navy.

NUMBERS AND RESULTS.

"A million new members and a million dollars for missions" is the slogan of the Fifth World's and Twenty-seventh International Christian Endeavor Convention, according to a dispatch from Chicago, where the Convention now is in session.

By leaps and bounds we go from small to great things. Mankind's ambition always has been as boundless as the planet and the ether which surrounds it. Contentment at best is but a comparative term and does not rest with possession of the things for which we have been striving. Where men formerly were satisfied in trying to secure a thousand this or that, they later sought to acquire ten thousand, then a hundred thousand, then a million.

Why should anyone try to get a million signers to a petition? It is like collecting a million cancelled postage stamps. Does the fact that a million people have signed a peace petition mean anything to the practical man? How many signers will stop to read it? How many will sign just to be obliging? For the same reason what proportion would not sign a petition presented by the next comer, even though it prayed for war? The right to petition is inalienable under our form of government. It should be under all forms, but at a time like this would anyone of strong mind who is entrusted with weighty responsibility be governed in the performance of duty by a petition like this?

A million dollars for missions is not a large sum in comparison with the amounts expended daily for war or contributed for benevolence, yet what good will it accomplish in teaching men to adopt and follow the Golden Rule for their daily conduct? A million dollars will help to civilize a large number of barbarians, whether at home or abroad, but will civilization and Christianity lead them to practice the Golden Rule?

At the outbreak of the war, Germany was one of the most highly civilized and Christianized nations, but unquestioned barbarities have been laid at her door since then and civilization does not accept without question her professions as to the cause of the war. The Allies, also, have not escaped censure in certain matters, and they, too, are highly civilized and Christianized. Neither civilization nor Christianity holds men in leash when passion is aroused. Are civilization and Christianity failures? Certainly, man's inhumanity to man has been no greater than when both civilization and Christianity were approaching their zenith in the Twentieth century.

Neither the one nor the other is a failure. Both have their weak spots. No machine, whether constructed of metal or of the hopes and aims of human beings is stronger than its weakest part. Both civilization and Christianity fail to take into account fully the weaknesses of humanity—its selfish and ambitious schemes, its passions and hates—and when the entire fabric seems strongest, it crumbles like a house of cards, and the work of reconstruction must begin again, its continuation and duration dependent, of course, upon the degree of destruction wrought.

Civilization and Christianity will readjust themselves to new conditions and will again make progress; the set-back is only temporary. The heathen at home and abroad will become civilized and in time they, too, will realize their opportunities to put passions into play for selfish attainment. But in the meantime they will have made many a forward step in following the Golden Rule of conduct. Civilize the heathen, but why burden civilized rulers with peace petitions which cannot and ought not to influence the result when principle is at stake? Principles of right and wrong never should be decided by petition.

A good many people have been deluded by the extreme politeness of language which characterizes Germany's last note to the United States, so that they are blind to the fact that the underlying ideas are so far from polite that they are insulting. Our Government has asserted the undoubted right of its citizens to travel on ships like the Lusitania and has asked Germany to disavow the outrage upon that vessel and "make reparation, so far as reparation is possible, for injuries which are without measure," besides taking steps "to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare." Instead of granting this just demand, Germany attempts to justify the Lusitania massacre and declares that our citizens may travel upon the high seas only under such regulations as she prescribes. She also asked us to violate our own laws and the laws of nations by preventing the shipment of warlike munitions on ships containing American passengers. With the patronizing air of a great lord she says that we may go so far as to acquire four more ships. All this is on a par with Austria's demands upon Serbia and Japan's ultimatum to China. President Wilson does well to consider this situation deliberately and calmly before he goes further, yet in the end he will find that he has not much room for choice.

SANE LIVING.

(By Our Woman Editor.)

When we have learned to draw the dividing-line between the need of a physician and the more urgent need of sane living, then indeed we have traveled far on the road that leads not only to the attainment of a sound mind and a healthful body, but all around comfort in our relationships with others.

When weary, over-burdened nerves cry out for more rest, when irritability displaces the normal serenity and when every bit of one's organism is in a state of protest, it is not nature's call for a physician, but a sure indication of violation of the laws that make for right, yes, happy living. And then comes the time for a bit of personal catechism.

Do we force "sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care" to give "way to the stress and strain of social or business demands?"

When the day is filled with so many duties—both the real and the fancied variety—that there are not minutes enough for the accomplishment of all, do we rush a bit more and add another weight to the nerve burden?

When aching head and eyes proclaim "Enough!" do we stop?

When the light begins to fade and the weary shoulders droop, is the burden of our cry, "Just a little more?"

When we find ourselves stagnating by our own narrow lives, do we stifle the call for more interests?

When we grow cross and easily disturbed by mere trifles, without knowing why, do we go on following every needless little sound? For sometimes, you know, those little, nagging calls that go on and on forever, like the brook, are the very little things that make folk snappy and cross and very disagreeable.

And when the song of birds and the gleam of sunshine temptingly invite a walk, do we still remain unmindful of nature's needs?

A lot of fancied ills—but they grow very real in time—are of our own sorry making. We may not be arbiters of our own physical fate, but we do not always use the good sense which we like to think is part of our endowment. Yet nature is pretty exacting in her demands and expects full payment for violated rules. If we borrow from tomorrow's store for the fancied needs of today, nature makes us pay in the end, and generally calls for usury. We roll up heavy accounts light-heartedly enough, but when the hard old day of reckoning is at hand there is nothing to offer for the heavy demands—nothing but exhausted vitality, worn-out nerves.

Just to finish a bit of gardening before the setting of the sun, I have seen a worker among her beautiful roses present herself at the table too tired to eat or to talk, a silent witness to her own folly in going too far.

And perhaps all of us know what it means to have that bad germ of impatience or irritability steal upon us, to our own discredit and to the serious discomfort of others, because we have let ourselves grow over-tired. And one says "let up," advisedly, because there certainly are times when it pays to "let up," even at the cost of work that seems vital. Because this is a very self-sufficing old world, and will get along quite comfortably without us some time.

Oh, yes; often and often it seems that it is not humanly possible to make a change in our plans, but when tired nature really is ready to protest, she does not ask us whether or no.

When sane living and sane thinking shall have found widespread and permanent abiding places in this world of ours we shall have seen the dawn of the millennium, and that does not seem at hand just at present. But there's a half-way station which puts out signals so earnest and plain that "he that runs may read"—if he will.

And is it not short-sighted to consult a physician when the one thing needful is, not drugs, not new bodies, not even a trip over sea, but conformity to the rules that nature exacts? And the pity of it all would be less pronounced if one did not see so many nervous, over-wrought folk all around.

HER JAMIE

A Historical Story of England and America.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

It was a sorry day for me when my father came to me and told me that I must give up all thought of my Jamie and marry Sir Ernest Merivale. The one I loved, but I knew that he was unsteady; the other I respected and was sure that he would make me a good husband. There were whisperings concerning Jamie that I did not like. It was said that after the defeat of the cavaliers by the roundheads he had followed in the footsteps of so many of the king's adherents and taken to the road to make a living. As for Sir Ernest, he was as steady as a rock and as true as steel. But Jamie had won me by that sweet smile of his, and I did not love Sir Ernest.

The Merivales had lived near us for many years. Ernest and Jamie were cousins, though Ernest was a good ten years older than Jamie. Ernest was an only son, and when he came into the title and estates by the death of his father his mother urged him to marry that he might have an heir. I was then a little girl, and he said he would wait till I had grown, and he would marry none but me. But of this I knew nothing at that time, though I noticed he seemed fond of me and gave me many a trinket.

Sir Ernest did not approve of many of the king's acts and sympathized with the parliament. Though he did not take up arms against the king, the royalists were bitter against him and vowed that when they had overcome their enemies they would punish him for not defending his sovereign. When father told me that I must give up Jamie and marry Sir Ernest I shut myself up in my room and wept bitter tears. But after awhile I grew calm and began to think, not like a foolish girl caught by a bauble, but as one called upon to decide between that bauble and the promise of a life of comfort. And yet the former was unattainable, for Jamie had no fortune, and I knew that the report concerning him was true. He had made himself an outlaw.

There was nothing left me but to marry Sir Ernest, and that I did. He was very loving and tender with me, treating me as a bit of china that he feared to break. When he said to me, "Joanna, I would not have you do violence to your heart, and I conjure you not to marry me without your love," I was ashamed that I was about to do that very thing. But I resolved that I would put Jamie out of my mind and live only for my husband.

When King Charles II. was restored to the throne those who had sworn vengeance upon Sir Ernest trumped up charges against him. Knowing that he was in great danger and wishing to keep it a secret from me or perhaps fearing that his enemies would inflict some direct punishment on me, he sent me to an aunt in Scotland to abide till the storm should have blown over and he might again feel a measure of safety.

While I was in Scotland my husband sent me letters by the post, but there came a long interval between his writings, and I wondered. When a month had passed and no word had come from him I told my aunt that I would go back to England. Then she told me that Sir Ernest had been arrested for high treason against the king, that his estates had been sequestered and that, having no home, I should remain with her in Scotland.

Despite her pleadings I left her and made the journey to London, for my husband had been sent to the tower, and I expected to find him there. Moreover, I intended to go to the king and plead for him. But when I reached the capital I found that the king was so engrossed with military Castlemaine that I could not get a hearing. I went to the tower and asked to see my husband, but was told by the Lieutenant that he was not there. He had been received there as a prisoner, but after a time had been delivered to Lord Carbondale by order of the king.

Now, I knew that Lord Carbondale was the bitterest of all Sir Ernest's enemies, and it was he who had made the threats to be revenged for my husband's support of the parliament, though this was not the true cause of his lordship's enmity. The two had been fellow students at Oxford, and Ernest had accused Carbondale of cheating at cards. I feared that this enemy, with the king's permission, had taken my husband's life or had kept him a secret prisoner. I spent months trying to find a trace of him, but no trace could I find.

One day there came news from America that the English had taken from the Dutch the town of New Amsterdam and renamed it for the king's brother, the Duke of York. In the account of these proceedings mention was made of one Merivale. Could this be my husband? If so, what did it mean that he had gone to this new country, leaving me, his wife, in England ignorant of his going? I believed that his enemies had contrived to have him sent out of the country or that he had seen fit to give the choice between death and betaking himself to a remote locality, where he could make no effort to regain his estate, which had passed into the possession of Lord Carbondale for services to the king's father during the parliamentary war. Possibly he might have died thither, as certain legends had gone.

I saw no hope of learning the truth as to whether this Merivale mentioned as being in New York was my husband without going there to see for myself. So I took ship for that country, though my friends endeavored to dissuade me. I was sick at heart at seeing those with whom I would have to voyage for so many weeks, for they were a motley crew. Some were criminals, who had been given their lives and liberty provided they would go to the new continent. Some were broken down spendthrifts, and there were among these a sprinkling of the younger sons of gentlemen.

When I sailed up the bay to New York I saw that the country was beautiful. But the people proved unattractive, for they were living in conditions far different from what I had found in England. As soon as I had found an abiding place I began a search for the man I believed to be my husband; but, although there were few people in the town, I did not find him.

But one day I met a person who told me that he had knowledge of one Merivale, who had set out northward to engage in the trade of skins of wild animals. I was discouraged at this and began to think that I had been unwise in coming on so long a journey to find a husband who did not think it worth his while to inform me of his whereabouts. Moreover, my informant could not tell me what manner of man this person was, and he might not be my husband after all.

However, having come so far, I resolved to go further. I took passage in a sloop bound for a trading post on the west bank at the headwaters of Hudson's river, and reached it after a few days' travel. At this trading post, which is now called Albany, I made inquiries for the Merivale I had followed so far, only to learn that he was out trapping wild animals for their skins.

So I must needs wait for him to come in. While I waited I received a letter that had been brought by one who had come in a ship soon after I had left England and sent on to me at Albany, which informed me that it was believed my husband had been put on a ship by his enemies and sent to America, but the writer did not know for what port the vessel had sailed.

I was now encouraged to believe that the man I was looking for was my husband, though I could not understand how he could have contented himself to engage in an occupation instead of returning to me or sending for me. And yet, while making a living, he might have written for me to come to him.

But this man for whom I waited did not return, and in time I learned that he inhabited a trapper's cabin near a town to the northward called Schenectady, where skins were brought in by the Indians. This town was not far distant, and I went over there with the next party that journeyed thither. As soon as I arrived I made inquiries and learned that a trapper named Merivale had built him a cabin on the bank across the Mohawk river, near the council grounds of the Indians.

By this time I had learned much self reliance and, securing the loan of a boat, I rowed myself across the river and directed my steps toward the cabin which had been pointed out to me from the opposite shore. As I left the boat a man came out of the cabin and stood looking down at me. He did not have the appearance of my husband, but as he advanced toward me there was something in his walk that set my heart a-billy beating. As he came nearer I looked upon his features with a view to noting if I had seen him before, but they were covered with a thick beard and I could not be certain. When we came close together both stopped and peered into each other's faces. I was about to fall backward in a swoon when he sprang forward and caught me in his arms.

He was my Jamie.

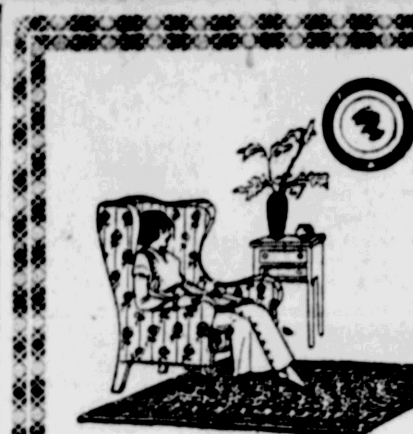

Then and there he told somewhat of those things that had happened to him since we had parted. When he heard of my marriage he resolved to join those who were going to America and bury himself where he would never again see me, and where he might make a more honorable living than on the road. From New York he had drifted to Albany and thence to a point nearer the grounds where furs were to be obtained.

I had set out from England to seek my husband and had found a lover whom I had discarded for that husband. And now I must return without either the husband or the lover. But Jamie knew what I did not know. He had received information which concerned us vitally. His cousin had not been sent to America, but had been made away with. Since Jamie was thus made the legal heir to the title and estates, which were entailed, Carbondale had hunted for him with a view to turning him over to the law to be dealt with as a highwayman. If he could secure his execution none would be left to dispute Carbondale's right to the property. But of all this Jamie had not heard till after his arrival in America.

There is much to tell of how in due time Jamie and I were married, how I returned to England and secured a pardon for him from the king and how Jamie followed me and eventually, as a favor to me, his estates were returned to him. But of this more at another time. We both lived to see the Duke of York as King James II. driven to France, and William and Mary proclaimed king and queen of England.

DAMAGES AWARDED TO MRS. SHUFFLE

The construction of the viaduct over the New York Central tracks at Rhinecliff and the closing of the Shatzel street grade crossing, near the ferry, has resulted in damages to Annie G. Shuffle of this city, owner of the Rhinecliff Hotel property, under a decision handed down by Supreme Court Justice Arthur S. Tompkins, for which she must be compensated by the town and the railroad company.

Judge Tompkins's decision affects not only the Shuffle property but also other properties similarly situated, the damages to which must now be paid for.

The case was tried some time ago before Judge Tompkins without a jury. The construction of the viaduct from a point near the ferry-landing over the railroad tracks to the new railroad station was followed by the closing of the Shatzel street grade crossing, Shatzel street being the street which extended from Rhinecliff village directly to the steamboat and ferry landing. Every one who used the steamboat or ferry landing must pass the Rhinecliff Hotel, which was considered one of the best hotel sites along the river. To reach the steamboat or ferry landing now from the hotel it is necessary to go to Shatzel street for some distance thence along the street leading to the station, and over the viaduct, and down the long incline to the landing, and the same route must be taken to reach the hotel from the landing.

Mrs. Annie G. Shuffle, who now resides at the Mansion House, in this city, was the owner of the Rhinecliff Hotel property, and when her right of way across the railroad to the steamboat and ferry landing was closed after the construction of the viaduct, she applied for a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the town of Rhinebeck and its town board to apply for the appointment of commissioners to acquire her right of way and assess the damages she had sustained. Her attorney in the entire proceeding has been MacDonal DeWitt of 140 Nassau street, New York city, a brother of County Clerk William C. DeWitt of Kingston.

Facts and Law Both Interesting.

The hearing of the matter before Judge Tompkins necessitated the introduction of much documentary evidence relating not only to land titles but also to the operation of the ferry between Rhinecliff and Rondout, the landing of boats at Rhinecliff and the construction and early operation of the New York Central railroad. The sifting of the facts left a most interesting story of the development of travel, which was not devoid of fascinating legal propositions.

Mrs. Shuffle claimed that she had a private easement, right of way and rights of passage and repassage in Shatzel street on and over the railroad tracks to and from her premises and the ferry landing at Rhinecliff. For the purpose of carrying out the grade crossing elimination order of the Public Service Commission of the second district, such rights were required, and she claimed that under section 22 of the railroad law it became the duty of the town of Rhinebeck to acquire her rights and easements by condemnation proceedings. The town board refused to take that action and she therefore applied for a writ of mandamus to compel them to perform their duty.

The Questions Involved.

The questions to be determined on the application were whether William H. Russell, who was her predecessor in title, ever had a private easement and right of way in Shatzel street across the railroad tracks to the river; if so, did he become divested of such easement and right because of his conveyance to the Kingston & Rhinebeck Ferry Company and the New York Central, and if Russell did have such rights and they had not been divested by his conveyances.

DAINTY FOOD.

Turn Pale Checks to Pink.

Our best physicians of the present day seek to cure patients by the use of food and right living, rather than heavy drugs, and this is the true method, for only from food can the body be built.

Many people, after living on poorly selected or badly cooked food for a long time, and when their ailments become chronic, expect the doctor, with some magic potency, to instantly rebuild them.

This is not possible. The only true method is to turn as quickly as can be, from poor food to good. A young lady in Ohio says:

"I was variously treated for my nerves, stomach, lungs, etc., but none of the treatments gave me relief. 'About a year ago when my appetite failed completely and I began to have sinking spells similar to fainting, I took all manner of tonics and stimulants, but they were of no effect. I had been brought to quit drinking coffee and taking Postum in its place and gradually began to get a little better."

"Someone suggested that I had better use Grape-Nuts food, as they were both the children of one brain. I commenced on Grape-Nuts food for breakfast, having Postum with it. I found the food so dainty, delicious, and appetizing that I always looked forward to breakfast with pleasure."

"Shortly after commencing this diet, the wretched pain in my side was greatly relieved, and now, a year later, it has gone entirely, also the sinking spells; in fact, my pale cheeks have changed to pink, I have gained back more than the twenty pounds I lost, and am thoroughly well in every way."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

whether the same rights and easements became vested in Mrs. Shuffle. For the determination of these questions, all the facts surrounding the various transactions were examined minutely.

William H. Russell for many years was a wealthy land-owner of the town of Rhinebeck and was one of the directors of the New York Central Railroad sixty odd years ago. He became the owner of the Shatzel farm at Rhinecliff on June 19, 1850. Prior to his purchase of the Shatzel farm, and on December 13, 1849, the Hudson River Railroad Company had acquired title to a strip of land along the east bank of the Hudson river. This strip covered the entire river frontage of the Shatzel farm and was acquired by the railroad company for its railroad and right of way.

This acquisition by the railroad company did not, of course, deprive the owner of the upland of his riparian rights, which included the right of access to the navigable channel of the river; the right to make a landing, wharf or pier, and the right of passage over the railroad tracks to and from the landing and the upland.

Railroad at Rhinecliff in 1851.

In 1851, the railroad was completed at this point. On March 28th following, Russell obtained a grant of land under water and afterwards built a dock on such land, west of the railroad and at the foot of what is now Shatzel street. For many years before there had been a steamboat landing and dock at the same location, and known as the Shatzel landing, but the new dock built by Russell extended further into the river. The old dock had been within the bounds of the railroad right of way, and was covered up when the railroad was built.

There was a road which led through the Shatzel farm from the public highway on the east to the old dock and the river. This road through the farm had been in existence and in use for many years when the railroad acquired its right of way. It was included within the bounds of what is now Shatzel street and was within such bounds when the railroad was built, and it continued to be the usual place of access from the Russell property across the railroad tracks to the river. The construction of the railroad raised a physical bar to his access from the upland to the river at all points, but the railroad company's charter provided that the usual place of access to the river should be preserved, so that Russell became vested with an easement and right of way in the road later which became Shatzel street, over and across the railroad to the dock and navigable channel of the river.

Only One Place of Access.

Mrs. Shuffle's counsel, Mr. DeWitt, contended that such a way, thus located, could not be changed without the consent both of Russell and the railroad company, and became appurtenant to the whole farm and every part of it—the more so in this case because the road which later became Shatzel street continued thereafter to be the usual and in fact the only place of access to the river from all the Russell lands.

The ferry between Rhinecliff and Rondout had been in operation before the railroad was constructed. Russell bought the ferry in 1850. After he had built the new dock in 1852, he commenced to run the ferry from the Shatzel landing, and on November 18, 1852, the railroad company established its station at the Shatzel landing and made an agreement with Russell that the ferry should be operated from that point as long as the railroad maintained its station there.

Russell sold the ferry and ferry rights in 1853 to the Rhinebeck & Kingston Ferry Company. Owing to errors in this conveyance and prior conveyances, the land under water which had been granted to Russell, and the dock and wharf at the foot of Shatzel street were not conveyed to the ferry company until February 21, 1861. Some time prior to May, 1854, Russell had made a map of his lands showing it to be divided into numbered lots and plots, intersected by proposed streets, and showing also the ferry, the dock and railroad station and the road, now Shatzel street, extending over the railroad tracks to the ferry landing. Lots shown on the Russell map and designated by numbers 14, 15 and 16 were sold by Russell to one Bradbury, who preceded Mrs. Shuffle in title, on February 26, 1861; lot No. 14 was shown to be bounded on the north by Shatzel street and was so described in the deed.

Mrs. Shuffle's Contentions.

Upon these facts Mr. DeWitt contended that Russell, when he bought the Shatzel farm, acquired a private easement and right of way in the road which later became Shatzel street across the railroad tracks to the river; that the conveyances between Russell and the ferry company and between Russell and the railroad company did not affect such easement and right of way except to operate as a confirmation of them; that Russell's offer to dedicate Shatzel street as a highway, if any there be, did not extinguish his private easement and right of way, but that such easement and right of way was appurtenant to every part of Russell's lands; that the easement and right of way passed to and became vested in Mrs. Shuffle's predecessor in title both because Russell sold with reference to the map and because he described these lots as bounded on a road wherein he had a private easement and right of way, and that such private easement and right of way now vested in Mrs. Shuffle and constituted property which could not be taken without just compensation.

Opinion of Judge Tompkins.

In his opinion, Judge Tompkins says: After a careful examination and consideration of the testimony, exhibits and briefs of counsel, I have reached the conclusion that the relator has a private easement and right of way on Shatzel street across the railroad tracks to the river; that inasmuch as such easement and right of way are necessary, and have actually been taken, for the purpose of carrying out the order of the Public Service Commission, made under section 91 of the Railroad Law, and the relator thereby has been deprived of her right of way, and can no longer use and enjoy the same, that the municipal authorities should, under section 92 of the Railroad Law, acquire by condemnation the relator's said easement.

Judgment will therefore be made in the relator's favor, directing the issuing of a peremptory writ of mandamus with costs.

Requests to find may be submitted within ten days.

Spread of Disease by Rodents.

That the migratory habits of rodents have a bearing upon the spread of disease is not generally known, but the United States Public Health Service, as a result of experiments conducted in plague epidemic work at New Orleans, asserts that such is the case. This is but another illustration that the field of preventive medicine is especially broad, and investigators therein must be thoroughly familiar with the life history and habits of flies, mosquitoes, ticks and even rodents.

Several hundred captured rats were marked for purposes of identification by having their ears punched, care being taken not to render them conspicuous, as fellow rodents were relentless warfare upon those which appear different from their kind. They were released in the heart of the city, and allowed to shift for themselves. Trapping was carried on in all sections, and each rat was labeled as to the locality caught. Fully one-quarter of the rats made widespread excursions, that is they were recaptured at points from one to four miles from where they were liberated. In one instance, a rat traveled 19 blocks, crossing one of the widest and busiest streets in the city, where there was no subterranean passage, and was retaken within 60 hours from the time of its liberation. From the experiments it is concluded that the semi-domesticated rat has migratory habits similar to wild animals, and that these habits are influenced by abundance or scarcity of food, facility for harborage, or the presence of natural enemies. It is also believed that certain inexplicable instincts tend to make the rat a wanderer. That in this instance the "homing" instinct was not responsible for the migration was clearly proven.

This migratory habit of rodents explains many facts connected with the dissemination of plague; it will also doubtless prove enlightening to those who have attempted to exterminate rats for economic reasons. The Indian Plague Commission was of the opinion that rats seldom journeyed from one section of the city to another, but the conclusion of the public health officials is quite the opposite. As a measure of the success of trapping operations, it is interesting to note that over one-half of the rodents liberated were recaptured within a month.

HIGH WOODS.

High Woods, July 12.—Fourth of July passed off very quietly. Mrs. Slater and daughter, Elsie, who have been ill with measles, are improving nicely.

A severe wind accompanied by a heavy downpour of rain visited this place on Thursday. Everything was flooded, still no particular damage was done.

The Rev. Mr. Martin is expected to preach as a candidate on Sunday, July 11.

Henry York, formerly of this place and Miss Annie Connelly of Saugerties, were married on Saturday evening last at St. Mary's rectory by the Rev. Mr. Taibot.

Stanley Van Aken is visiting his father and sister. Dr. Gifford had the misfortune to break the spring of his auto while driving over a water break in this place recently. We have many of them, and they are very disagreeable to autoists.

A feeling of sadness swept over this place when the news of the death of Arthur Brown came to us. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved parents. A number of friends from here attended the services at the grave.

Greene & Fredenberg are supplying their customers with red raspberries.

Miss Luella Lasher, who was recently married, is now residing at Kingston.

Inspection of Children's Gardens.

The ladies of the Ulster Garden Club who were instrumental in organizing the school children's garden club last spring, will begin the first inspection of the gardens about July 14, and it is hoped that all children interested will be ready to receive them.

Paint-Wise

is to paint when your property needs it. Paint-foolish to wait for the price to go down.

But so many are foolish, they'll wait a good while. The whole rise in the cost of a job is 10 per cent. The first year's drop won't be more than half that, more likely a quarter.

Waiting for 5 per cent, more likely 2 1/2.

The average job (with Devoe) is $50; 5 per cent, $2.50. Put it off for $2.50? Guess not. You think of that job as $100. So it is with inferior paint.

Paint Devoe; do it now, if your property needs it.

MATTERS BEFORE THE SURROGATE

Surrogate Gill has granted letters of administration on the estate of Sarah Lounsbury of the town of Marlborough to her husband, Severn H. Lounsbury. The value of the real estate is $253.05 and $25 personal property. J. DePuy Hasbrouck appeared for the administrator.

The will of Jeanette V. Ekerick of the town of Woodstock was admitted to probate. The testatrix gives all her personal belongings and household goods to her companion and her adopted daughter, Emma Marie Koderl, for the benefit of herself and her daughter, Marguerite Koderl. In her trunk, says the testatrix, will be found lace and dress goods of considerable value and she recommends that these be sold by someone acquainted with their value and who has some way of reaching their proper buyers. There are also three Turkish or Persian rugs and she must take good counsel as to their disposition. Other goods, such as curtains, table covers, etc., are given with love and best wishes for their enjoyment. The mahogany pieces given by the testatrix to her adopted daughter are very old, she says, and have been in her family for nearly or over two hundred years and are truly valuable. They may cause some controversy with the testatrix's family to recover the same, but the testatrix states that no one in her family has any claim of any kind upon them, and she wishes this disposition to be final and binding. The family have in their possession many of her books and pictures and pieces of the same kind and quality of furniture, and the testatrix states she does not feel they have any rights to be respected in the disposition of the furniture she has mentioned.

She directs also that if her distribution in the Rutherford estate is recovered during her lifetime and her share shall yield an income of $1,500 or $2,000 or anything near that sum, it is to be given in trust to the Trenton Trust Company of Trenton, N. J., for the sole benefit of her mother, Mrs. Mary Emma Gulick, of Kingston, N. J., or in case of her mother's death, she directs that $1,000 each be given to her nieces, Jane Wendenburg and Elizabeth Mulligan Gulick, and her nephew, James Green Gulick, of Princeton, N. J., and also that there be paid from the Rutherford estate but from no other funds the sum of $1,000 each to the daughter of Martha Washington Gulick, and to the son of Charles Parker Gulick, both of Kingston, N. J. At the death of her mother the principal of the Rutherford estate shall be to be handled by the Trenton Trust Company or some equally good trust company for the benefit of Emma Marie Koderl and her daughter, Marguerite Marie Koderl, the same to be equally guarded, invested and distributed with their help by Ernest August Lueddecke of Woodstock, provided he marries Emma Marie Koderl and makes her little girl his regularly adopted daughter.

The testatrix also directs that her body shall be cremated and the ashes buried in a Kingston Cemetery or scattered, at the convenience of Emma Marie Koderl or Ernest August Lueddecke. She also expresses the wish that all her old private papers and letters shall be burned without examination except letters and accounts pertaining to last summer's work for the Misses Woodward and Johnson of Shady, and these may be handed by Ernest August Lueddecke to Charles Shults of Bearville if he wishes them for any purpose whatever. No executor or executrix is named in the will and letters of administration with the will annexed were issued to Emma Marie Koderl. The will was executed April 14, 1915, and witnessed by Charles E. Leppo and Cora C. Leppo, both of Woodstock. The value of the estate is $500 personal property.

The will of John A. Baker of the town of Rochester was admitted to probate. To his son, Myron D. Baker, the testator devises his real estate at Nos. 116 and 118 Pearl street, this city, and the south half of the barn; to his daughter, Emma and S. Baker, he devises the property at Nos. 108 and 110 Pearl street and the north half of the barn; he directs that the house at Nos. 112 and 114 Pearl street shall be occupied jointly by them, gives each of them the sum of $1,000 and directs that the homestead farm be owned jointly by them. The balance of the estate, including the house and lot at Accord known as the Lefever place is given to the two children mentioned and they are appointed executors. The will was executed May 2, 1914, and witnessed by J. C. Enderby and Ira D. Early, both of Whitfield. The value of the estate was $5,000 real estate and $5,000 personal property. Virgil B. Van Wageningen appeared for the executors.

The will and codicil of Vincent Orlando of the town of Marlborough were admitted to probate. The will and codicil were filed in September of last year, and their provisions were published at that time. The Bankers' Trust Company of New York city, which was appointed executor, renounced and letters of administration with the will annexed were directed to be issued to Serena Montefusco, the residuary legatee. The will was executed April 1, 1914, and witnessed by James S. Carpenter and John Rusk, both of Marlborough; the codicil was executed May 18, 1914, and witnessed by Mr. Rusk and Dr. Albert H. Palmer.

The matter of proving the will of Josiah L. Hasbrouck of the town of Olive was adjourned to July 20. John W. Eckert appeared for the petitioner.

A. Mickens of this city and a decree passing and approving his account was granted. Virgil B. Van Wageningen appeared for the executor.

In the estate of Celia Boyd of this city, a petition for a judicial settlement was filed by John N. Boyd, the executor, and a citation was issued returnable July 26. Robert G. Groves appeared for the petitioner.

KILL all the flies that survive the winter. One fly killed in March is equal to killing millions in September or August.

Be sure that no flies can either feed or breed on your premises.

Set a fly trap baited with food in the back yard so as to catch the insects on their way from their breeding places to your home.

Refuse to trade with dealers who do not screen their supplies and who permit even a few flies to be present in their dairies, restaurants, markets or bakeries.

INCOGNITO

By RUTH GRAHAM

Jack Meriwether was a howling swell. Being rich he had nothing to do except amuse himself. But amusement with him must be taken out of doors. He was devoted to tennis and baseball—in fact, all athletic sports. When thus engaged he dressed accordingly, but as soon as he had finished a game he bathed in perfumed water and put on attire quite elegant enough for a prince of the blood.

Mr. Meriwether was also fond of autos, having several in his garage, and he kept them all in order himself. He had plenty of tools, and whenever anything in the machinery of one of his cars broke or became disarranged he would don his overalls and fix it. One day he had been working under a car long enough to become much begrimed and, having repaired the damage, concluded to try the machine with a view to seeing if what he had mended would hold. He preferred this course to risking a breakdown in a car filled with others.

Jack did not change his overalls or wash the smudge off his face or hands, but started down the road looking for all the world like a greasy mechanic. The machine behaved admirably, and Jack was about to turn back when he saw ahead of him a lady alight from a machine that had stopped and look ruefully at it. Thinking she might need assistance, he went on till he reached her. He at once recognized Miss Ethel Ashmore, a young lady he knew slightly. But Miss Ashmore failed to perceive in the man in overalls, with his face covered with blacklead and grease, one whom she had met socially. Seeing a mechanic, she was much pleased at the prospect of an assistant.

"Would you be so kind as to examine my machine and tell me what's the matter with it?" she asked.

Jack pulled his machine to the side of the road, alighted and looked for the trouble. He soon found it and said that there was a broken rod that would have to be repaired. This involved taking the machine to the garage.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed the girl. "What shall I do?"

"I can get a rope at one of these farms hereabout," suggested Jack, "hitch your machine to mine and take it to my shop. Then as soon as I can duplicate the rod I will put it in for you."

"I wish you would," said the girl. "I'll pay you for what you do."

Jack re-entered his machine, ran down the road a bit to a farm house and returned with a stout rope. Then, having hitched the two machines together, the girl got into hers to steer it. Jack got into his own machine and dragged the load to his garage.

"Now I'll take you home," he said. "Tomorrow I'll have the needed part, put it in, and in the afternoon will deliver the machine at your home."

"Could you have it there by 4? I usually go for a drive at that hour."
"I have no doubt of it."

Jack enjoyed the part he was playing and, expecting that Miss Ashmore would recognize him if he put on good clothes, drove her home as he was. When he left her at the door she said:

"If you will tell me how much the bill will be I will pay it now."

"I think the price of the rod to replace the broken one will be about $3. I shall have to charge by the rules of the union, 70 cents an hour. My time on the job will be about three hours. Call it all $5."

The young lady put her gloved fingers into her portemonnaie, took out a five dollar gold coin and dropped it into Jack's begrimed hand. Then, turning, she went into the house, without looking back.

The next afternoon at precisely 4 o'clock an automobile drew up at Miss Ashmore's door. She heard it and, assuming that it was her machine, she went out dressed for a drive. She was somewhat puzzled at the changed appearance of the mechanic. Instead of overalls he wore a suit built by a fashionable tailor, a double breasted, fancy waistcoat, a voluminous azure polka dot necktie, while on his hands were a pair of new tan gloves. Nor was there the slightest sign of black on his immaculate complexion. Alighting, he stood uncovered.

"Good afternoon, Miss Ashmore."
"Why, Mr. Meriwether!"
"Fortunate, wasn't it, that I came upon you yesterday when you broke down?"

"You don't mean?"
"Yes; I am the mechanic who rescued your machine and brought you home."

"Heavens," exclaimed the lady, biting her lip and coloring, "and I paid you for?"

Jack flipped with his thumb the coin she had given him which he had converted into a fob, saying:

"Here it is. I have earned it, and I mean to keep it in memory of the service it was my happiness to do you."

Miss Ashmore blushed and as soon as she recovered her composure said:

"A good automobile mechanic should also be a good driver. Perhaps I may hire you for my chauffeur this afternoon?"

"Not for hire this time. One memento will suffice, but I shall be happy to serve you, all the same."

The two got into the car and sped away.

A lady who heard the story remarked, "Those two should make a match." And they did.

TRICOLOR OF FRANCE.

First Adopted in 1794, it Fell and Rose Again in 1830.

The French have always favored the colors of red, white and blue, and throughout their history red banners, white plumes and blue scarfs have been largely used in connection with royalty and the army.

The French national flag, the tricolor, however, which combines the three popular colors of France, is comparatively modern. The flag was first adopted about 1794. A decree was issued which gave to all flags a knot of tricolor ribbons at the top of the staff, and later the red, white and blue design was chosen for the national flag.

Some years after it was abolished for the white flag of France made famous by Henry IV., and it was not until 1830 that the tricolor came into its own again. Since then the flag has been the national banner of France.

The divisions on the tricolor are not all the same size. The red occupies the largest space, the blue is slightly smaller than the red, and the white is the narrowest stripe of the three. The space occupied by the colors has been scientifically worked out in order to make the flag visible at long distances, a necessary asset for naval purposes.

The tricolor forms the base of nearly every flag connected with the army, navy and merchant service of France. The president's flag consists of the tricolor, with his initials in gold worked into the white stripe.—London Standard.

The Dog Team.

Now the modus operandi of a dog team is as follows: The leader and wheel dog are the whole works on the basis of 75 to 255. The leader starts 'em, he stops 'em, he picks the trail, he turns 'em. When he walks, the rest do; when he gallops, they gallop. All the wheel dog does is to guide the nose of the sled, materially assisted by the driver. The rest of the team merely pull and yelp.

From which follows that a good leader is a very desirable thing to have and a poor leader is worse than useless. The driver, at the handlebars, is often thirty feet from the leader, the dogs being driven tandem and controlled by word of mouth and a whip.—Outing.

one and all, can be supplied at little country home, if you will only look

MYSTERIOUS DEATH OF TWO HORSES

Within the past week Supervisor
John J. Cashin, the well known soda water bottler of Ann street, has lost two valuable horses and all signs point to their having been poisoned.
The horses died only a few days apart. Drs. Lown and Clark were called in to treat the animals when they showed signs of illness but were unable to save them. All efforts were made to find out what was the trouble with the afflicted horses but to no avail. Finally Dr.
Sunderland of the county laboratory was summoned and he took portions of the vital organs for examination.
His decision has not yet been made but the opinion prevails that the animals were poisoned. Mr. Cashin states that he has not fed his horses anything out of the ordinary and has purchased his feed from a reliable dealer and no other horses using the same feed have shown any sign of sickness. The team was valued at about $500.

MENKE'S DAILY SPORTING LETTER

(By Frank G. Menke.)

New York, July 12.—One of the things the matter with baseball is that some of its leaders have been destroying the food that nourished the goose that laid the golden egg in years gone by; i. e., unlimited newspaper publicity.

Newspaper owners throughout the country are awakening to the fact that for many years they have been enriching the baseball magnates by giving them unlimited advertising absolutely free; that they have opened the columns of their papers and gone to huge expense to boost a game that long ago ceased to be sport for sport's sake and became a monster amusement enterprise conducted solely for the purpose of making wealthy the men engaged in it.

In one of the biggest cities on the American League circuit, the publishers of rival papers got together recently, discussed the situation, and, as a result, issued orders to their sporting editors to keep down professional baseball news in future to certain—and small—limits.

"And if those baseball magnates make any sort of howl," added the publishers, "we'll cut down the space still farther and charge them advertising rates for inserting box scores and league standing."

The sporting pages of the papers in that part are now being devoted more largely to real sports—to golf, to tennis, amateur baseball, rowing, football and the like. And, odd as it may seem, the readers of those sport pages aren't complaining. It seems as if the readers had become rather tired of a superfluity of baseball and are quite contented with a new diet.

"The newspapers have made baseball what it is," said one editor. "Without the publicity that the newspapers have so lavishly given to baseball in the past twelve years baseball news would have reached its present prominence. Two newspapers have made it possible for the magnates to make fortunes out of the game. They have made it possible, through their free advertising of the game, for John Tener to get a salary of $25,000 a year from the National League and for Ban Johnson to get a life job at $15,000 a year from the American League."

"The life of newspaper depends upon its advertising receipts. It charges regular rates for advertising theatrical productions, circuses, races and the like, but its returns from baseball advertising have been almost nil. In some cities the clubs insert a small ad—about one inch—while the club is playing at home. That means a few dollars a month for the newspaper and in return for this a newspaper hires special baseball writers, pays them big salaries and then gives unlimited space to boosting the game of the money-mad baseball leaders."

"In the early days when professional baseball was something of a real sport—when it was the national pastime—it was perfectly proper for the newspapers to boost the game. But the game long ago passed out of that stage. It now is a business enterprise conducted solely by the men behind it for the purpose of enriching themselves. Sport? Bah! What do the magnates care about the sporting part of the game? They are after the money—and nothing else. When they find there isn't any more money in it for them they'll close up their parks in a hurry. As to providing sport for the public—well, if the public wants to pay all right. If it doesn't, there won't be any sport. That's the attitude of the magnates."

"Baseball has degenerated into nothing other than a free-for-all battle between rival money-mad factions—a revolting condition that has killed all the genuine sentiment in professional baseball."

"Some magnates have the foolish idea that if baseball were abolished the American sport lover would die of grief. What utter bunk! If baseball were abolished today the sporting pages of the future would be just as sizeable and just as interesting with golfing and tennis news, with stories of simon pure athletes, of football gladiators, billiards, horse-racing, yachting, swimming bowling and other genuine sports."

"Probably, for a time, the rabid fans would miss their baseball 'dope,' but only for a time. The infallible rule of life is that the dead are soon forgotten. Our grief, no matter how great the loss, usually is brief. Our interests turn to other things and soon is absorbed by them."

"In practically every town in the country some rattling good amateur games are staged among the teams made up of the older boys. Those are real ball games played by people who play the game because they love it—and play it with their whole heart and soul. The rabid fan, if deprived of professional baseball would go to see those games—and he would find them just about as complete with thrills as some of the alleged 'major league' games that are being played today."

SAMSONVILLE HEIGHTS.

Samsonville Heights, July 12.—Freeman Every recently spent a few days at New Paltz.

Mrs. Asa Barringer has been spending a few days with her daughter, Mrs. William Beesmer, at Olive Bridge, who is ill at this writing. We hope for her speedy recovery.

Quite some damage was done by the terrible wind storm that passed over this place Thursday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Hazlie Wager of Ashokan spent Sunday last with her brother, Robert Beesmer.

All who attended the Fourth of July celebration at Krumville Saturday evening, reported a fine time.

We are glad to say Mrs. Harvey Barringer is somewhat better at this writing.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Beesmer spent Tuesday night at Mr. and Mrs. Robert Beesmer's.

RARE OLD BASEBALL

The oldest baseball in existence is owned by the president of the East End Church Baseball league in Pittsburgh. The ball is nearly fifty-three years old. It was used first in a championship game between the Eclipse team of Kingston, N. Y., and the Hudson team of Newburg, N. Y. The game was played on June 20, 1862, and ended 49 to 18, in favor of the Kingston team.

The ball is made of one piece of horsehide, sewed in the center. When it was first used underhand pitching alone was permissible. Curves were unknown.

The ball carries $500 burglary insurance and $500 fire insurance. It was given to its present owner by John Miller, who played first base on the Eclipse team. Miller is one hundred years old now, and lives in Cornwall-on-Hudson.

CUB FIELDER IS FAST

Williams Is Said to Be Speediest Runner in the Game.

Work of Graduate of Notre Dame University in the Outfield Has Been Spectacular—Makes Many Unexpected Catches.

A new star has shot athwart the Chicago baseball horizon in the person of Outfielder Fred "Cy" Williams. This young man is a graduate of Notre Dame university and is said by many competent judges to be the fastest runner in the national game.

He could have gone to Stockholm, Sweden, and taken part in the Olympic game, when Jim Thorpe won so many honors, but declined on account of his studies. Williams holds the record for hurdling and if a contest is ever put on for circling the bases he will surely be hard to beat. The other day he scored from second base on the squeeze play.

Williams is not entirely a stranger to National league patrons, but it was not until 1915 that he was given a steady position on the Cubs and has been batting over the 300 mark, and some of his drives are the talk of the western half of the old circuit.

During the training trip he made eight home run drives, most of them over the outfield fences of the various parks in the South. Recently he made the longest drive in the history of the new ball park at Cincinnati at the expense of Leon Ames, and there were two men on base at the time. In playing the outfield the work of Williams has been unusually spectacular. People have sat in their seats and fairly gasped at some of his unexpected catches. He covers so much ground that nothing seems impossible for him to accomplish in the line of catching flies.

Boland Laude Manager Fohl. Bernis Boland, Tiger pitcher, predicts that Lee Fohl will be a success as manager of the Cleveland Americans.

Fohl was manager of the Akron team when I broke into professional baseball," says Boland. "He is one wise fellow. I think he knows a ball player about as well as any manager in the business and, for one, I will be surprised if he doesn't make good right through the season."

Evers a Prognosticator.

Johnny Evers, during the spring trip, cautioned the Braves against the Cubs this year. "The Cubs will be the one team that we will have to beat out," said Johnny, and from the way that the windy city animals are performing it looks as though John was considerable of a prognosticator.

College Prospect Falls.

At least one of Connie Mack's college prospects has already failed. He is Lear, the Villanova youth, who failed to show anything like class.

Fifty Chances With No Error.

Hans Wagner at second base for the Pittsburgh pirates handled more than 50 chances without a skip in the early games this season.

Fashion Forced on Women.

In the reign of Philip III of France women were forced to wear velvet in obedience to ecclesiastical decrees.

If a great captain of industry should resolve to lead a better life and never again to utter an untruth we imagine the supreme test would come when someone timidly asked him if it wasn't possible that the trouble with his business was partially due to the fact that his company was over-capitalized.—Columbus (O.)
